- It is a long road from Moscow to Yalta by car - about the same distance as the trek from New York to St. Louis. But that's where the comparison must end, abreptly, like one of the potholes in Melitopol, a bleak town of yawning craters in the Ukraine. In theory, the trip should give a feeling of the sweep and drama of Russian landscape and history. The road is the one Leo Tolstoy used to take from Moscow to his estate at Yasnaya Polyana, and that Ivan Turgenev took to his estate at Spasskoye Lutovinovo, and that Anton Chekhov took to Yalta.

The route south from Moscow takes you through the "black earth" zone, past the World War II tank battlefield at Kursk, onto the Zaparozhye Seeh, where Cossacks once gathered, to the Crimea, the Black Sea peninsula made famous by ancient Greek settlers, Florence Nightingale, Chekhov, Franklin D. U.S. Says It Misread Soviet Intelligence

By David B. Ottaway

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The United mated Soviet intelligence capabilities for the past 15 years and has used in building the chancery's wrongly assumed that superior walls and floors. U.S. counterintelligence technology would thwart Soviet efforts to penetrate the new U.S. Embassy in Moscow, according to a State Department study.

The Soviet Union's planting of electronic listening devices in the unfinished building was "both foreseeable and foreseean," said the report written by James R. Schlereport written by James R. singer, who was appointed in January by the State Department to study security problems at the embassy. "But as a nation, we have failed to anticipate the boldness, thoroughness and extent of the penetration," the report said.

A former secretary of defense and director of central intelligence. Mr. Schlesinger assessed the security damage to the eight-story main embassy building, or chancery, in Moscow. The 14-page report was released Wednesday.

The techniques used to bug the building with a full array of intelligence devices" are so sophisticated that the United States even today does "not yet understand either the technology or the under-lying strategy" behind them, ac-cording to the report. Some conclusions were made public earlier this week when Mr. Schlesinger testified before Congress.

In his report and comments at a subsequent news conference, Mr. Schlesinger echoed earlier criticism that the Reagan administration particularly and the U.S. government generally have not taken the Soviet intelligence threat seriously

Mr. Schlesinger said it had been "uphill sledding" for such critics and conceded that once "a gradual dawning" of the extent of the Soviet threat permeated the govern-ment, the State Department "was one of the last to get on board."

But he also said that there had been "no standout performances" among the U.S. intelligence agencies and departments, adding "the blame is upon all of us as a nation."

Mr. Schlesinger's recommendations to Congress included rebuilding the top three floors of the chancery and construction of a six-floor annex for top security functions at a cost of $35 million to $40 million beyond the $192 million appropriated for the embassy compi

Mr. Schlesinger said Moscow DENIAL was "imaginatively exploitive" of eavesdropping technology used by intelligence services around the world. The United States had "no comparable advantage" in this field, he said, and should be "learning from the Soviets."

New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan's decision to send a special envoy to Damascos to explore improving relations was a re-sponse to Syria's closing of offices of the Abu Nidal Palestinian terrorist group, according to adminis-tration officials.

The officials said Wednesday that the focus of the trip by Vernon A. Walters, the chief U.S. delegate to the United Nations, would not be the fate of the nine American hostages held by Iranian-backed Shiite militia forces in Lebanon. although they acknowledged that the hostages would be discussed.

Mr. Walters is expected to arrive

Sixteen months before voters go to the polls to elect the next president, the Democrats clearly found common ground. They said a candidate's programs should be judged by their potential effect on chil-dren. They insisted on the need to move rapidly toward arms control. They bemoaned a lack of moral leadership by the Reagan administration, using the Iran-con-tra scandal as a touchstone. And they said U.S. economic leadership was in jeopardy.

The Democrats met in an unlikely forum, a special edition of "Firing Line," the televi-sion program hosted by William F. Buckley Ir_ the conservative commentator.

Mr. Buckley invited all of the announced Democratic candidates: Bruce Babbitt, the former governor of Arizona; Senator Joseph R. Biden Jr. of Delaware; Governor Michael S. The debate was likely to help all the candidates, who are still relatively unknown.

As expected, no candidate scored anything like a knockout blow, and there were no major blunders. Mr. Gore, who has been searching for a voice, showed signs of finding it with vigorous statements on arms control and a pledge to dismiss anyone who hed to Congress or stole from tempayers. He also jousted skillfully with Mr. Buckley on the president's proposal to build an anti-missile system in

One sign of concord among the Demo-crats was their eagerness to debate Mr. Buckley instead of each other.

Paul Tully, Mr. Dukakis's campaign manager, said his candidate had sought to use Mr. Buckley as "a surrogate for Reagan, for a set of values and a style."

A dramatic moment in the debate came when Mr. Buckley asked Mr. Jackson about a toast he had made to President Fidel Castro on a visit to Cuba. Referring to the political prisoners the Cuban leader held, Mr. Buckley asked if the toast had meant a "long life for Castro and a short life for his

Mr. Jackson replied that he, too, wished that Mr. Castro would "change his ways." But then he noted that at the end of that same visit he had brought home 30 Americans who had been held prisoner.

The only point on which the candidates came close to opening an intraparty fight over issues came in regard to trade.

Mr. Gephardt vigorously defended his tough amendment to the trade bill as not being "protectionist." He called it an effort to "put action behind the words" used to demand that U.S. trading partners open their markets.

But Mr. Biden indirectly attacked Mr Gephardt's amendment. And Mr. Dukakis came across as the most unabashed free-Second, trade even then will hardly be free, in the sense it is within the United States, unless exchange rates inside Europe can be stabilized. A devaluation by one Community country can as effectively repel imports as an equivalent trade barrier. But the European Monetary System, designed to stabilize Western Europe's currencies, is still a fledgling.

Temporarily in Lebanon?

Lebanon is unforgiving terrain to outside ars who would direct its destiny. Israel invaded in 1982 and felt lucky to get out in three years, mission unaccomplished. Syria went in in 1975 and is still stuck, also mission maccombished. The Syrians have old ambitions of empire in Lebanon, and President Hafez al-Assad apparently believes it is a fit place to demonstrate leadership prowess.

Last February he got in deeper, sending 7,000 troops into Moslem West Beirut, one of the most lawless and enarchic sections of Lebanon. Now he has dramatically apped the ante, sending troops into West Beirut's heretofore inviolate southern suburbs. He did this after his policy was directly challenged by somebody's assassination of a lavored Lebanese politician, Prime Minister Rashid Karami, and by somebody's kidnapping of a favored American journalist, Charles Glass. The southern suburbs are a sprawling, shummy, mostly Shiite area, where live the Iranian revolutionary guards, who are now believed to hold up to 25 Western hostages. Mr. Assad brought the Iranian guards into Lebenon in 1982 to fight the Israelis. They have since taken on a political will of their own. They are not only ungrateful and munity clients but genuine terrorists.

President Assad finds it convenient to come forward now as an opponent of terrorism. It is one of the ways in which he is trying to return to the good graces of the Western world, which reacted strongly against his regime's terrorist activities last year. The Israelis are pleased to see Syria squeezing, for its own reasons, the groups that do the most damage to the lingering Israeli presence in southern Lebanon. Europe and the United States are uncomfortable condoning an expanded Syrian mission in Lebanon, a country whose independence they profess to uphold. But they see that Lebanon's own government cannot police the country, and they quietly hope President Assad will be able to extract Western hostages — without getting them killed. Absorbed as Europe and the United States are by their own Lebanese preoccupations, they have an obligation to remind Damascus that its proper mission is not to smother Lebanon but to help restore enough local stability to enable Syrian forces to start getting out.

billions in loans from Europeans. When The U.S. Treasury terminated a tax treaty with the tiny Caribbean state this week, it triggered panic selling in the $600 billion Eurobond market. The Treasury was right to crack down on the Antilles' collusion with U.S. tax cheats. But it was wrong to do so by breaking faith with foreign investors.

Americans paying interest to foreigners were formerly required to withhold 30 percent for U.S. taxes. The rule did not apply to firms in the Netherlands Antilles, which thus became home to subsidiaries of American businesses issuing $32 billion in bonds.

The Treasury asked the Antilles to provide information on tax evaders who use the islands as a haven, along with legitimate American business. The Antilles would not, so the Treasury terminated the tax treaty. This might persuade the Antilles to soften its stance on tax evaders. If it does not, American borrowers will gain a windfall.

The Netherlands Antilles is a conduit for Termination gives companies the right to illions in loans from Europeans. When The pay off their orphaned Antilles bonds. Since most of these were issued when interest rates were higher, refinancing saves them money. The catch is that such American gains are mirrored by European losses. When the treaty was dumped, bond prices fell by as much as 25 percent, generating billions in losses for investors, and uncertainty about American reliability. Analysts believe that U.S. borrowers (including The New York Times) will have to pay substantial premiums in order to attract newly skittish foreign investors.

That would be bad news any time. With the American economy importing more than $100 billion in capital annually, it is much worse. The Treasury could repair the damage to lenders by issuing a regulation exempting the orphaned Antilles bonds from withholding. If the Treasury will not go this far, Congress will have to act to keep U.S. faith with foreign creditors.

Other Comment

According to some reports, Jacques Chirac, the French prime minister, felt that Mrs. Thatcher behaved like a "housewife" in Brussels on Tuesday night. Other accounts have it that Mr. Chirac claimed that the British prime minister was bringing the values of "a shopkeeper" to the European summit. In retrospect it matters little whether Mr. Chirac was demonstrating his sexism or his chauvinism at the end of a long negotiating session. The disciplines of the housewife and the prudence of a nation of shopkeepers were very appropriate to this summit. Its purpose was to impose a little financial discipline on the European Community, whose budget is out of balance and out of control. The present struggle to control the budget and to reform the agricultural policy is, how-

Farm Subsidies: The Worsening Crisis Is Good News

By Robert Samuelson

WASHINGTON — Be thankful for small favors. The European. Community faces a budgetary crisis due to skyrocketing farm subsidies. Cost overruns are estimated at $4.4 billion this year. That is good news. In fact, one should pray that things get worse. The only hope for ending the ruinous farm policies practiced by most industrial nations, including the United States, is for them to become oppressively expensive.

In Europe, the United States and Japan, farm policies raise retail food prices, generate surplus production and require huge government subsidies. Farmers do not ultimately bene-fit, because subsidies perversely raise their costs by increasing land prices. The United States suffers doubly: Its policies cost too much at home, and other countries' policies burt its farm exports. Developing countries that ex-port food are also losers. Absurd as all this is, reforming farm dream. But now there is a glimmer of hope. Next week the United States will propose at world trade negotiations that almost all farm subsidies be phased out over a 10-year period. Almost no one thinks the U.S. plan will be completely adopted, but the mere possibility of major reforms is a radical change from three years ago.

Secount for a third of farmers' profits and cost the U.S. government $25 til-

Another is growing public discuchantment with the inequity and ineffectiveness of present pol the governments of all industrialized countries have now publicly conceded that their price-support policies are at the root of the agricultural surpluses and dangerous trade conflicts. There is a widely shared consensus that price supports should be phased out and replaced by more precisely targeted, less market-distorting and less expensive forms of assistance to help farmers. adjust to a more competitive environment.

ble and its food security as vital - and the two are linked in the public mind," writes Dennis Avery, an agricultural analyst at the State Department. Even in the United States, any reform agree nient would face opposition from the least efficient farmers, who might be forced out of business. There are also serious technical problems in negotiating worldwide cuts in farm subsidies and trade barriers. Because national

The American system is basically different. There are a few import re-Resistance is sure to be fierce. "Ev- strictions: the ones on sugar, dairy ery country regards its farmers as no products and meat are the most important. But farmers generally tocrave market prices for their prod-nets, and then the incomes of many farmers - mainly grain, cotton and rice producers — are supplemented by direct subsidies. One good owen for global farm talks is a new ac-counting system that compares the value of different subsides and there-

Japan import sames no rice and only small amounts of beef. The European Community imposes variable import levies of that less expensive food. that Japan's farmers are the most sub-sidized, deriving nearly three-quarters of their income from government poli-cies. For the 1982-84 period, Japan's Europe are more than twice the world PSE was 72 percent, compared with 33 percent for the European Community, 22 percent for the United States and 9 percent for Australia.

The main impens for the world farm talks, of course, is agriculture's altered economies. In the 1970s the costs of farm subsidies seemed tolerable. Strong global economic growth and high initiation baoyed food ex-ports and kept farmers' mecanes high. The 1980s slower economic growth has changed the picture completely. Increases in world grain exports have cessed. Import restrictions close markets that are now desperately desired, while subsidies and high support prices alter overproduction.

The United States is hardly blameless. Along with the Europeans, it has kept out cheap sugar and hurt the Philippines and Caribbean nations that are big exporters. The U.S. sugar support price is roughly three times the world level. But the Europeans are the worst offenders. The Community ers at high prices and then dumps the surpluses at subsidized prices onto world markets. It is these costs that are bankrupting the Community. Meanwhile, the dumping depresses world prices and penalizes more efficient exporters: the United States, Australia, Canada, Argentina and Brazil.

The United States is now fighting

Europe's export subsidies with its own. It is an expensive war that could be ended by abolishing import restric-tions, domestic subsidies and support prices. Less efficient farmers — some European wheat producers, Japanese rice farmers and U.S. sugar producers -would fail Food prices in protected markets (Europe and Japan) would fall, while world export prices would rise. Because some countries would become more dependent on imports, an agreement on world food reserves to case fears about possible shortages would also be logical. The problem is not figuring out what should be done but, as usual, doing it. So contemious are these issues that the food negotiations will last at least until the end of 1988. What is at stake is whether most of the world's farmers can be weared from their private welfare state. So take cheer in the It is just possible that the shock of

Latin America's Democracies Are in Trouble

LONDON — President Reagan boasted re-cently that 90 percent of the people of Latin America live in countries under democratic rule or "turning to democracy," compared with only 33 percent a decade ago. This is true, but perhaps he should not be the one to point it out. His blatant disregard for the South American eco-nomic condition is laying the groundwork for a return to authoritarian rule.

Debt-forced austerity will tear some of these fragile democracies apart. Already there are signs that the continuing economic crisis is encouraging a breed of nationalistic populists calling for a renunciation of debt and a promise of jobs. There will be Peronism not democracy.

This is very different from the heady days of rapid economic growth in the '60s and '70s. Life expectancy at birth, perhaps the most important indicator of a society's fundamental well-being, rose from 56 to 64 years. The proportion of people with access to clean running water rose from about 40 to 65 percent. Although income distribution remained lopsided, most of the poor saw their living standard rise at about the average rate for the population as a whole.

All this made it possible for the democratic impulse to take root and gather strength. It was nurtured by President Jimmy Carter. Americans may have forgotten this, but South Americans have not Mr. Carter was mobbed by thankful crowds when he made a private visit to Argentina after his election defeat in 1980.

Ronald Reagan, to his credit, has continued to support the evolution of Latin American democracy, and largely by fair and open means— except in Nicaragua and El Salvador. But on the economic front his indifference and purposelessness is working to undermine it.

American countries have done much to adjust to the harsh economic environment. Currencies have been depreciated, public sector deficits reduced and import substitution projects pushed. But partly because world demand has remained singuish and partly because it takes time for production and exports to respond to policy changes, adjust-ment has come more through import cuts than through job-creating export expansion.

These countries could still do more. Too many are overloaded with state-run inefficiency. And more could emulate Chile and Costa Rica, which have done the most to protect the poor, particularly the children, by carefully targeting valuerable groups with special mutation and health programs. Still, the Western world, particularly the United States, has a grave responsibility to do more. After all, it was in response to U.S. advice that Latin American countries tried to outgrow the effect of oil price rises by borrowing so heavily from Western commercial banks.

If the United States cannot now come up with

WASHINGTON — If Joseph Biden had a reputation for seriousness, he forfeited it in the 24 hours after Justice Lewis Powell announced his departure from the Supreme Court. The Democratic senator from Delaware did much to achieve the opposite of his two goals: He strengthened President Reagan's case for nominating Judge Robert Bork, and he strengthened the Democrats' case for not nominating Joseph Biden to run for president. Six months ago, Mr. Biden, whose mood swings carry him from Hamlet to hysteria to hysteria, was given chairmanship of the Judiciary Committee, an example of history handing a man suffi-cient rope with which to hang himself. Governments, it was stated on that July 4, are "instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." Governments, that is, are manmade, not God-made; and when they persistently abuse natural rights, they may be guiltlessly altered or abolished.

The declaration called this philosophical mouthful "self-evident," or at any rate claimed that the right of revolution flowed from self-evident truths.

Americans are more enthusiastic about the United States left behind an unof half a century of despotism.

The contras, Mr. Reagan has often said, remind him of the U.S. founding fathers. No statement could more clearly reveal the difference of perceptions over which Americans are arguing today. No doubt some of the contras Nicaragua is not the first or the only are pure-at-heart democrats. Others are nostalgic Somoza followers, border Would Washington and Jefferson, Franklin and Adams, be flattered by the comparison? It seems unlikely.

The president, in a reference to his foreign policy in a recent speech, cited luminous lines of John Quincy Adams about U.S. support "wherever the standard of freedom and independence has been unforted." He mysteriously omitted the lines that immediately follow: "But ries in which smaller powers like the she goes not abroad in search of monsters United States had to thread their way to destroy. Avoiding, Not Evading

Regarding "European Tax Pact Adopted" (June 27) by Axel Krause:

The International Chamber of Commerce does not represent or issue statements "on behalf of employer associa-tions in 107 countries." The ICC is the world business organization, and its membership is made up of individual companies and industry, services and trade associations in 110 countries.

Further, the ICC categorically condemns tax evasion. Its arguments against the OECD/Council of Europe Convention on Mutual Administrative Assistance in Tax Matters are based on legitimate business concerns. The ICCs arguments have been a matter of public record since 1985, and can be summarized as follows:

Letters intended for publication rould be addressed "Letters to the Editor" and contain the writer's signature, name and full address. Letters should be brief and are subject to editing. We cannot be responsible for the return of unsolicited manuscripts.

Labor: Something Left

Regarding "A Turning Point in History: British Socialism's Demise" (June 18):

The Labor Party limishes second in an election and George Will announces the death of socialism. What would be have announced if it had finished third? Given the fact that socialism currently rules the lives of about 1.5 billion people, this scens a trifle precipitate. By the way, if Mr. Will checks a poincel map of Britain, he will find that the socialists, undeterred by their reported demise, romped in Scotland.

ARTHUR LINDLEY.

William Safire's allegations against the ruler of Kuwait, in "Put an End to Kuwaiti Blackmail" (June 19), are unfounded and lack objectivity.

The writer fails to mention that Kuwait is a small country that lives in peace and provides its people with free health care, free education, free housing and one of the highest living standards in the world. It is an easis of peace not only for its citizens but for the hundreds of thousands of foreigners who have flocked there to share in its wealth.

Asking the superpowers to protect shipping in the Gulf is not blackmail, but a way of making them face up to their long standing promise to protect this strategic part of the world and inter-national shipping. By asking both Mos-cow and Washington for protection, Kuwait has proved its neutrality.

Mr. Safire cannot blame the authorities for arresting Kuwaitis who bombed oil installations and public facilities. Or for helping Iraq financially - which every other Arab state should have done long ago, especially since Iran is refusing to stop this senseless war. If anyone is to be blamed, it is the United States, for all its empty promises and inefficient foreign policy. America is proving to be an unreliable ally. This is turning away many of its friends.

HUSAM ALMUFTI.

The Wrong Communists

Michael Leifer's opinion column "Philippines: Communists in a Quandary" (June 24) contains an error. The advertisement he mentions as having been placed in a Manila newspaper by the Communist Party of the Philippines (CPP) was actually placed by the Partido Komunista ng Pilipinas (PKP). While this literally translates as the Communist Party of the Philippines, the PKP, the pro-Soviet traditional Commun which led the Huk rebellion in the 1950s, has no connection with today's CPP, which controls the New People's Army (NPA) and is Maoist in orientation.

The distinction is not academic. The CPP is a real threat. The PKP, reduced to advertising its presence, is a joke.

Penthouses on the Up and Up

ecause domestic staff were traditionally accommodated in attics, the highest floor in British homes has always carried the lowest status. But now height is on the up and up, and London is following the Manhattan precedent where penthouses are top homes for top dogs. Apartments which elevate you to rarefied heights above your fellows command an enthusiastic market here and premium prices.

By dictionary definition, a penthouse is a humble shed with roof sloping against a higher wall or a small house on another building's flat roof. So some developers are cashing in on the vogue by calling any top-floor garret among the chimney pots and TV aerials "the penthouse suite". However, it is generally accepted that the real McCoy should be a duplex (or more) at the top of the building, command spectacular views over the city, attain a degree of luxury with spacious rooms, en-suite bedroom with bathroom and a substantial balcony, terrace or roof garden.

Most of the glossy London agents agree that such penthouses attract a special type of buyer - extrovert, successful, cosmopolitan. Says Aston Chase's Mark Pollack: "Theyre expansive people who want lots of space but are too busy to cope with the hassle of taking on a big house and garden." Avril Bull, of De Groot Collis, comments: "Perhaps it is a question of style. I find penthousers are markedly individual, even eccentric."

Hampton & Sons partner popularity of the penthouse offers a different style of living from the rest of a block of flats from the herd."

Wandsworth Council's Livingstone Estate was clearly in this category when private developers Regalian took it in hand last year. It is pouring in £20 million for a refurbishment of the 356 flats in two 19story towers and five other blocks. The confidence of Regalian boss David Goldstone has proved fully justified. It has been renamed The Falcons, and buyers of the 200 units already complete are showing substantial capital gains. The top-most tower flats, the very ones which were most difficult to let when publicly owned, now fetch the highest prices.

Water Power

The businessmen queuing to pay Mayfair mansion prices for London Dockland warehouse conversions are attracted by its proximity to the City. But that's not the only factor. The Thames waterfront has its own magic

The fact is that when a house overlooks river, sea, estuary, lake or even duckpond, there's a premium price for it. Savills, the West End agency, says that this averages around 30 per cent. That was confirmed when it sold identical homes, one with direct water frontage at £195,000 and one without at £150,000.

More finely tuned analysis by David Pallot, partner with Chestertons Prudentia, reveals a further differential depending on the ebb and flow of the seasons. He knocks five per long and 18 ft wide which cent off the premium in winter because January's grey cold waters lose some of their magic.

Besides, there's some vestigial folk memory of flooding from days when "in summer the river is at the bottom of your garden and in winter your garden is at the bottom of the river.'

With this hazard now overcome in London by the Thames Barrier, builders are racing to cater for the wet set. Morgan's Walk on the south bank facing Chelsea has been one of the most successful projects. Such long queues formed to snap up the first phase that the developers, Wates, promptly withdrew it from the market and came back with higher prices.

On the other side of Battersea Bridge, but the same side of the river, Sunley's waterfront residential block sold with equal ease. Of course, the greatest success story is Docklands, but that's old hat now. The latest vogue is marina villages, and they're selling at a rate of knots.

Star project in the capital is the £100 million Chelsea Harbour. A 20-acre site with halfa-mile of Thames frontage, it will eventually house 2,000 buyers who pay from £230,000 for a two-bedroom flat; from £875,000 for four bedroom apartments. Star unit is the three-storey penthouse in the Belvedere Tower, so out-ofthis-world that joint agents Savills and Hamptons don't know what to charge. They intend putting it out to sealed

A word or two about Soviet trucks: Given the state of the roads, it is a good thing there are no double trailers. Weaving in and out of a row of Kamaz trucks, around pot-holes, is bad enough. Italian Communists In Rare Public Rift

The Italian Communist Party has elected Achille Occhetto as its deputy secretary and beir apparent to the party leadership after an unusual public quarrel. The dispute started last week when Alessandro Natta, 69, the secretary, said he wanted Mr. Occhetto, 51, as his deputy, with a view to turning over the party leadership to him in the near future. Traditionally, Communist Party chiefs have remained in office until removed by death or incapacity.

By forcing a vote, Mr. Natta outmaneuvered the Communists' strong right-wing minor-ity, which had hoped to gain greater influence after the party's defeat in recent general

In the past, Italy's Commu-nists, while acknowledging internal divisions, had tended to rally almost unanimously behind majority decisions once they were made. But this time the rightists opposed Mr. Occhetto's appointment down to the final vote in the Central Committee. L'Unità, the par-ty's paper, focused its headline on the division: "Occhetto deputy secretary. 194 Yes, 41 No. 22 Abstentions." Turin's moderate La Stampa summed it up: "The Communist Party has changed."

Mr. Occhetto, coordinator of the party secretariat, has spent most of his life as a party official. He has long been on the left of the party and belongs to the generation that was formed under the leadership of Enrico Berlinguer, who died in 1984. He is expected to become party secretary before the end of the Council of Europe Acts Against Torture

The ministerial committee of the Council of Europe has adopted a convention for the prevention of torture that permits inspection of prisons, police stations and psychiatric hospitals in the council's 21 member countries.

A committee consisting of one representative of "high moral standards" from each member country will have the task of verifying that "persons deprived of their liberty" by the authorities are not subjected to "torture or inhuman or degrading punishment or treatment." The committee does not have to ask (or the countries' approval but it must inform them of planned inspections. The governments concerned may delay inspections but cannot bar them indefinitely.

Although the committee will have no legal power, it will be in a position to exercise pressure.

British think tank. The report said few of the students leaving school were able to speak and write English correctly because a new teaching "orthodoxy" had abandoned "standard English" in favor of regional and ethnic dialects. The erosion of language skills poses a threat to the country's future and education officials should return to teaching methods stressing spoken and written grammar, sp ing, punctuation and "standard English usage," the report said.

Austrians are getting fatter ustead of fitter, according to the Vienna Doctors' Association. The doctors said half of all deaths in Austria were caused by heart attacks and other circulatory diseases, mainly because of too much fat in the blood. "Austria's passion for pigs' trotters, roast pork and schnitzels can be fatal," the association said.

The French government has decided to save an animal cemetery that was due to close Sept. 1 because of a lack of funds. The 19th-century cemetery at As-nières, a Paris suburb, will be registered as a historic site and bought by the government. About 2,700 dogs, cats, rabbits, monkeys and horses are buried in the graveyard. The most famous dog buried there is Rin Tin Tin, the star of American films of half a century ago.

Britain's House of Commons sticks to colonial rules when it comes to the summer clothes of members of Parliament. On Monday, when temperatures reached 82 degrees Fahrenheit (28 degrees centigrade), Speaker Bernard Weatherill reprimanded a newly elected Labor member for turning up in shirtsloeves. The member, Bernie Grant, duly wore a jacket on Tuesday, which was almost as hot at 79 F. But that same day, another member was seen wearing a safari shirt, shorts and no tie. The speaker, obviously no slave to consistency, silenced objections by saying such clothes were "often worn in

New Island off New England

The heavy storms on the Eastern Seaboard on Jan. 2 broke off the southern piece of the Nauset barrier beach on the eastern aspect of Cape Cod, giving Massachusetts, and the town of Chatham, a new island as a gift for the New Year. The island, about three miles long and half a mile to three-quarters of a mile wide, is referred to now as South Beach Island, although the Audubon Society, which has been studying the island's ecology closely, likes to think of it as Audubon Island. The society's Wellfleet Bay Wildlife Sanctuary conducted a few tours this spring, and this summer it will offer tours on a number of Fridays running into September. Participants meet at the Chatham Town Hall for the 10-minute trip by outboard across Pleasant Bay. The four-hour visits will concentrate on the fall shore birds' migration and on the terns, which will be finishing up their nesting at the same time. The director of the Wellfleet center, Robert Prescott, sups that the beaching of the peninsula stranded a pregnant fox, some skunks and some meadow voles, which are rodents. Now the fox family is eating the skunks and other creatures, but the foxes in turn may not survive the coming winter. The first four visits will be July 17, July 31, Aug. 14 and Aug. 28. The fee for members of the Massachusetts Audubon Society is $20; nonmembers pay $25. Advance registration is required. Supersonic Sacher Torte

■ New York lovers of the re-nowned Austrian chocolate cake, Sacher Torte, can now order their favorite sweet by Concorde from Vienna, Ex-ports of Sacher Torte, which is made in Vienna's resplendent Hotel Sacher, should help to revive the country's flagging image abroad, the hotel's owner Peter Gürtler said Thursday. According to Gürtler, 30 percent of the 200,000 cakes produced annually are exported. Deliveries to New York will be effected overnight by Concorde, so that the cake will be "fresh on the table" the morning after the order, said Wolfgang Moser, sales director of the express courier service entrusted with the carvo. The U.S. price for the largest Sacher Torte, includng dispatch by Concorde, will be less than double that in Vienna, Gürtler said. A standard Sacher Torte sells for 390 schillings (about 30 dollars) in Vienna.

Bastille Day on the Streets

■ On July 14 the French will once again take to the streets in wild rejoicing to mark Bastille Day, when a revolutionary mob took over the hated prison. It is a day of lots of fun, but getting around may be difficult and shops are shut for the national holiday. On July 13, streets and market places come alive with funding and the sir fills with the rich smells of grilled susages and trying crèpes. Orchestras and accordinaists entertain till dawn. In Paris, the largest of these gatherings are at the Place de la Bastille, in front of the Montparnasse and St.-Lazare train stations, the Place d'Italie (13th arrondissement), Place Gambetta (20th) and the Jardin des Tuileries. Fire stations around Paris have dances, too. A list of stations organizing balls is available by calling 47.54.68.18. On July 4 firecrackers are allowed, and the explosions on the pavement sometimes begin the night before. Mischief makers aim particularly at the legs of passers-by. Firecrack-ers are also often thrown down into tourist boats from bridges over the Seine. On July 14, from 9 A.M. until noon, the traditional military parade takes place on the Champs-Elysées; it includes an air show. The following museums (which are normally closed Tuesdays) will be closed July 14: the Beaubourg, the Louvre, the Rodin Museum and Versailles. The city Museum of Modern Art and the Carnavalet Museum will also be closed for the national holiday, but La Villette and Orsay will be open. On the night of July 14, villages and cities stage fireworks shows. This year Paris plans a special display to commemorate Jacques Chirac's 10th anniversary as mayor. It will take place at the Trocadero, across the Seine from the Eiffel Tower at 10:30 P.M. Good places to watch may begin to fill up in the afternoon, particularly at the Place du Trocadero, Palais de Chaillot, Eiffel Tower and along the quays and bridges from the Pont de Grenelle to the Pont de l'Alma.

Crossing the River In Normandy

by Stephen Williams

EPPE, France -- Yes, there is life in Normandy after Deauville, it is only necessary to cross to the other side of the Seine to discover it. Just as Paris has its Right Bank and Left Bank, so does this rich province of warriors, explo church and château builders . . . and hard-drinking Deauville is the "Left Bank," while, north, east and south of Rouen, the regions of the Pays de Caux and the Vexin Normand form the "Right Bank," a country characterized by its chalky soil, quiet streams, beech woods and manor houses.

The north-south itinerary of this motorist's delight starts with a 20th-century battle and works back in time to a medieval treaty, the two events separated by about 130 kilometers (80 miles) and more than 1,000 years. It reflects the contrast between Normandy's military history and the pleasant land that has been its stage.

On Aug. 19, 1942, an Allied force of 7,000 men, mostly Canadians, "tested" the German fortifications of the English Channel port of Dieppe and found them strong indeed. Although the Daily Express of Aug. 20 bannered, "Commandos Leave Dieppe in Flames," the short-term results were devastating for the raiders: They left behind thousands of casualties, while Berlin crowed that an attempted invasion of the Continent had

A few kilometers west of Dieppe, at Pourville-sur-Mer, stand monuments to the sacrifice of the South Saskatchewan Regiment and the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders of Manitoba. Perhaps it was fitting that this feat of arms was Canadian, since New France across the sea had been visited as early as 1524 by a vessel that had sailed from Dieppe. Between the port and Pourville, a war museum has been fashioned from a Wehrmacht bunker, one of the principal objectives of the raid; on its grass-covered roof are strewn tanks and guns of both armies, leaving the visitor with the curious sensation of having arrived just after the smoke cleared.

At nearby Varengeville-sur-Mer, memories of war fade into the lush symbols of peace and wealth: mansions with their flower-dotted yards and huge trees, secure between high hedges and the cliffs of the Côte d'Albâtre. Crowning this profusion of lawns and thododendrons is the floral park of Les Moutiers, 9 hectares (22 acres) of trees and plants gathered from around the world, a private project started in 1900 and now open to the public.

A short walk away is the 12th-century church of St. Valery and its cimetière marin, where Georges Braque and his wife are buried. The artist did a stained-glass window for the church, but the glory of the place is its site, a delicately poised perch in the wind, overlooking the whitecaps of the channel far below.

Cliff connoisseurs will want to continue west to Etretat, by way of St. Valéry-en-Caux and Fécamp, before returning to Dieppe to begin the twisting, cider-besotted ramble south to Richard-the-Lionheart country. The pebble beach of St. Valery, a shrimp-fishing town with a large marina for pleasure craft, affords a remarkable view of the coast's fortress-like chalk cliffs, a long curving wall as impregnable as a Norman castle. In fact, this impressive barrier is fragile, the sea slowly nibbling at its flaky flanks. The dissolving cliff material tints a broad swath of the lapping channel

water with a milky wash, which, with the cliffs themselves, gives the Alabaster Coast its name. From Fecamp, once a major cod port and now a fish-processing and sailing center, an inland incursion along the D925 road leads to the village of Cany-Barville and a first taste of the Pays de Caux interior. After the flat plateaus of the coastal clifflands, the country narrows into the typical configuration of the Caux and Vexin: rolling hills indented by valleys of pasture, snaking rivulets, orchards and half-timbered hamlets.

Standing in a vast open park in the valley of the Durdent is the Château de Cany, a sober structure of brick stone and slate that could sum up the 17thcentury stately home of the Norman anstocracy, Its artitude is solitary, self-sufficient and uncompromising, with more than a touch of arrogance. The valleys and forests of eastern Normandy down to the confines of the He de France are marked by these noble houses, many of them surrounded by poplars and beeches, jealous of their privacy. Cany is open to visitors during the summer months.

Near the château, between two arms of the Durdent, the tourist can relax at the Manoir de Barville, a small hotel-restaurant (tel: 35-97-79-30), which offers peace and quies and nouvelle cuisine at reasonable prices (a 95franc menu, about $15.50, and rooms at 120-280 highway splits in two, the D915 slipping into la Normandie profonde, with the Chateau de Miromesnil, where Guy de Maupassant was born, to the west, and Arques-la-Bataille, to the east. The D54 winds down from the plateau to Arques, with a fine view of the ruins of what was one of the most important medieval military constructions in the province. Here, in 1589, Henry IV, still the Protestant "king without a kingdom," defeated the Catholic Ligue, strengthening his royal

The 65-kilometer swing south through the cider country of the Pays de Caux affords a brief rest from military istory, with the hills of the forest of Eawy to the left and its perennially green valley to the right of the D154. A succession of lumber mills marks the progression through increasingly wooded country toward the confines of the Pays de Caux, a secret, almost lonely patch of earth that ends at the delightful Andelle River and one of the outstanding landmarks in miniature of the region - Vascoeuil Castle, ASCOEUIL, though small in size, would seem to sum up the history of the region: Originally part of the medieval Norman defense system, the château passed from illustrious family to illustrious family until coming full circle as a billet for the soldiers of several armies in World War II. After the war, the dilapidated structure was taken in hand by a Paris lawyer, who decided to rebuild it using a set of 18th-century plans for the house and gardens, and employing the traditional materials of the area: oak, sandstone, jagged flint and rough rubbles-

The result is a doll's house, charming and harmonious, in spite of the massive colombier ("dovecote" is too precious a name to put to this brick colossus) that sits in its front yard. But the resurrection, which won a national prize for restoration in 1972, has gone further than architecture. Vascoeuil has become a center for contemporary art, staging regular exhibitions of international painters and sculptors.

Every part of the estate has been turned into a showplace for the art of our time: sculptures scattered around the manicured park, paintings in the château and tapestries hung in the colombier. Vascoeuil also houses a museum containing memorabilia of the French historian Jules Michelet (1798-1874). who lived and wrote there.

Michelet is not the only writer associated with this velvet land of pastures, water and wisteria. A few miles away lies Ry, which Flaubert used as his setting for Madame Bovary." The Rotisserie Bovary, in the center of town, offers a solution for the motorist who needs some solid food to soak up the cidre bouché (hard cider) he has presumably been sampling along the way.

At Vascocuil, the pleasant Andelle marks the border between the Pays de Caux and the Vexin Normand to the south. Leaving the château in the direction of Lyons-la-Foret, the road winds through one of the great

THE FREQUENT TRAVELER Half-Price Europe

In a Coupon Book

by Roger Collis

RTHUR FROMMER said it was "the greatest thing since chocolate cake. He himself had tried to do something like this ten years ago. but at that time neither European hotels nor restaurants were prepared to listen."

So says David Selikowitz, publisher of "Half Price Europe 1987," a fat book of 657 discount coupons good for 50 percent off or two-for-one offers on hotel rooms, shops two-tor-one offers on hotel rooms, shops and restaurants, car rentals, excursions, museums, concerts, nightchubs, hairdressers and even dance classes and deep sea diving lessons in 15 countries, including Israel. Coupons are color-coded by country.

It's an idea whose time had to come.

"We've sold close to 100 000 books this year.

"We've sold close to 100,000 books this year, about three-quarters of which have been specialized editions for companies to resell or give away as promotions to their best customers," Selikowitz says. So far, about half the consumer sales have been made in the United States.

The book sells to the public for about $60, mostly through department stores, such as Galeries Lafayette in Paris, and by mail order. You can get a free copy if you buy a Saab car, fly first class with UTA, buy a raincost at Aquascutum or test-drive an Alia Romeo humpy car. Saalink Empire collection Romeo huxury car. Sealink Ferries sells two reduced-size versions ("Half Price France" and "Half Price Britain") on its English Channel crossings, each for 90 francs ($15). Coupon books of this kind are big business in North America. But Selikowitz claims that his is the first for Engravan establish. that his is the first for European establish-ments, except for one published in London for restaurants and theaters.

Selikowitz, an American who has lived in Paris for 20 years, formed a French company, American Marketing, at the end of 1985 to launch the book. It took two years to produce the 1987 edition, the first. The idea came about from our young Israeli, Simon Avilea, now vice president marketing, after spending six months in Los Angeles. He saw all these books and asked, 'Why doesn't this kind of thing exist in Europe? So we spent six months testing, first of all, would Europeans do this? Because be felt that maybe times had changed. And maybe they now would. And it's working."

The biggest problem, Selikowitz says, has not been selling the book, but convincing French and Italian hoteliers and restaurateurs to give a significant discount. "Everyone was willing to give a free glass of cham-pagne. But we said, that's just not sexy; well-to-do people will only be interested if the discount is 50 percent

Hotel chains that participate in the program (although not all properties in all countries) include Sheraton, Hyatt, Hilton, Holiday Inn, Novotel, Thistle, Relais & Chateaux, Copthorne, Ladbroke, Edwardi-an and Best Western. They include famous hotels, such as the Cipriani in Venice, the Ritz in Barcelona and the King David in Jerusalem. The 50 percent discount applies only to the room on an "availability basis" ("This means, under our contract, that if the hotel is more than 30 percent full it need not accept the coupon," Selikowitz says) but good for as long as you stay. "Availability" at a few hotels is restricted to certain times of

The deal with restaurants is that you get main course is ordered at the regular price; no surprise that the free course is always the least expensive of the two. (The strategy must be for your guest to join you with filet mignon au poivre at $15 instead of poulet tarragon at $9.75). No surprise that you pick up tax and service.

But let's not complain. Consider, for example, how you can spend your coupons in Paris. You are sure to find a hotel to suit you out of the 24 listed in the book, from the small, luxurious L'Hô.el on the Left Bank, the expansive Holiday Inn, Meridien, Hôtel Club Méditerranée and Hilton Orly to bijou hotels like the 20-room Résidence du Bois and the more modest Mapotel Terrass in

You have 30 coupons for eating out. Choose from a complimentary main course at Lamazère (except for truffles!) or Le Viply a pastrami sandwich at Yankel's. There is a good choice of bistros and ethnic restaurants. If you fancy eating kosher Chinese, you might try the coupon for a place called, Louis de Nissane. After dinner, you can enjoy your second bottle of champagne free at the Crazy Horse or catch the Champagne Revue midnight show at the Lido with "50

You can spend a fortune saving money on perfume, porcelain, leather goods and liquor. But don't forget to claim your free silk tie (there's no obligation to purchase) at Aquascutum. (You can get a free tie in London as well.) Once you've exhausted your Paris coupons, you might try a half-price car rental down to the south of France (more coupons) or cross the channel to London with a 50 percent reduction on Hoverspeed or Sealink.

Yes, it seems almost too good to be true.
Which is why "Half Price Europe" has had a mixed reception. Says Selikowitz: "Some people are amazed by it. They don't know whether to believe it simply because they are not used to these kinds of things. In northern Europe, everyone believes in it; no problem, it's taking off wonderfully. And Americans, of course, see it immediately. But Latins are very skeptical. The French will say, "Club 13 in Deauville is never going to give me 50 percent off; this must be a rip-off." Although people are now going out and actually using the coupons. And writing letters saying, 'I really saved!' " Schkowitz claims that a "major U.S. airline" has bought a million copies of a special edition for a winter promotion this year and that AT&T has condend 10 000 entire which that AT&T has ordered 10,000 copies which it will sell at cost in the United States, as part of its "Call U.S.A. Direct" program. He also has plans to "take the drugstore back to America" by marketing a "Half Price U.S.A." primarily aimed at European travelers. "Most U.S. discount books are not really usable for European triviters. usable for European visitors; they either cover a specific city or the whole country. I mean the Holiday Inn in Oakland is not exactly a tourist destination." he says. "We'll concentrate on the six or seven major cities and take in hotels and the more sophisticat-

A great advantage with "Half Price Eutwo-pound book around with you; just detach the coupons you need for a trip. What's frustrating is that you'll never begin to use them all. If you were to, according to Selikowitz, you could save about $15,000.

Miniature Souvenirs Of the 17th Century At Burghley House

by Terry Trucco

TAMFORD, England — The big wood display case was filled with 17th-century portrait miniatures, but a little boy's face demanded attention. He had flowing curls and a regal expression, hardly suprising for Louis XIV, who ascended the French throne at the age of 5. Likenesses of little Louis are rare, which made this particular miniature, by the remade this particular miniature, by the re-nowned French enamelist Jean Petitot, a

The story behind the little picture was equally appealing. It was snapped up in the late 17th century by John Cecil, fifth Earl of Exeter, who made the grand tour of Italy and France four times in his 52 years.

He was a champion collector, who always returned to England lades with paintings, tapestries and furniture as well as more numdane commodities like gunpowder and trea-cle. His holiday souvenirs can still be seen here in Burghley House, a magnificent 16th-century mansion about two hours from London, which is home to an assortment of his descendants and is open annually to the public from April to October.

Set on a majestic 1,400 acres, Burghley House is the size of a New York city block and looks like a palace. It has a dignified mustard-color facade fashioned from local limestone. It has 240 rooms and countless turrets and towers. It has an art collection studded with works by Tiepolo, Veronese

It was built by William Cecil, the first Lord Burghley and Lord High Treasurer to Queen Elizabeth I, who awarded him this prime plot of land, formerly the site of a 12th-century monastery. For years Burghley House has been widely acknowledged as one of the largest and grandest remnants of the First Elizabethan Age.

Yet until 1956 the place had no electricity, and the attics were dark until 1982. The last infusion of light was a revelation. Since then, virtually hundreds of "lost" treasures have been found in the Burghley attics, including the portrait miniatures now on display.

The portrait miniatures, which fill a big airy room to the side of the house, are this season's special exhibition at Burghley and will be on view through Oct. 4. They also represent Burghley House's efforts to hire more guests as the competition for visitors heats up among the hundreds of historic homes that dot the British Isles.

In the old days, that is a decade or so ago. all a house here had to be was old, with noble architecture, a good location, a decent ancestral pedigree or, for a happy few, all three. But visitors have grown picky, particularly with the increase in the ranks of historic homes on view. The best of Britain's houses, like Burghley, now try to unveil a few new

Several little paintings by William Hogarth are displayed as well, including a charuning postrait of the composer Handel; complete with Isonine hairdo. These are had a fortune and helped bankroll those had a fortune and helped bankroll those billed as Hogarth's only known ministures, though the show's curator admits they were probably removed from a larger picture the artist destroyed.

Most miniatures, in contrast, were designed specifically as tiny paintings to be kept in a folding frame or to hang, grouped with others, in a special case. These minia-tures incorporate skills handed down from the 15th-century manuscript illumination. The term miniature actually has less to dowith size then with the Latin word minium. meaning the vermilion pigment commonly used by illuminators.

Miniaturists were also obsessed with detail and sought to depict every espect of the sitter's costume, headdress and skin tone. Though little Louis XIV's oval portrait is just one and a half inches (3.8 centimeters) high, his feather hat and lace collar are meticulously drawn.

But the Burghley ministures are most intriguing as an introduction to the house and its former inhabitants. Most of the palmcenturies, depict members of the Cecil family and show an array of painting styles as

Anne, Countess of Exeter in the late 17th century, was no great looker either. But in addition to purify eyes and a sloping chin, she had a fortune and helped bankroll those continental jamus the free-spending fifth earl enjoyed. As painted in miniature by Nicholas Dixon, she wears a pretty dress. After the exquisiteness of the miniatures, it's almost a relief to return to the rest of the house, where everything is on a grand scale. Burghley hads from an expansive era of big rooms and high ceilings. Nothing seems as massive as the old kitchen, with its fan vault ceiling and an enormous painting of an evis-cerated ox, presumably to get the cooks in

The Great Hall, with its 60-foot ceiling of carved wood, is just as grand, it served as a basequet hall in the days when Queen Victoria visited, though today it is a pleasant site for concerts. Why Ler Andelys? The plural form is a function of military history. The original Andely, now called the Grand lies a kilometer or two from the Seine banks. It is an old lown that has seen much war, the last time in 1940 and again in 1944, when the ebb and flow of armies destroyed its center. The story of Normandy starts with the Viking raids on France in the 9th century via the Scine, the first chapter in this violent book ending in an encounter on the Epte river, 23 kilometers southeast of Les Andelys at the present-day town of St. Clair-sur-Epte. The Epte forms the boundary between two provinces whose modern names. the Vexin Normand and the Vexin Français (Norman Vexin and French Vexin), indicate the outcome of the French struggle

Kashmiri way of life you would not otherwise see.

In the Valley of Kashmir

VERY year more than 50,000 Westemers visit the valley of Kashmir - most of them setting off at around this time of year in order to catch the best weather. Kashmir is usually a small part of a larger tour; visitors are booked onto houseboats for two or three nights, and because their time is limited, so is their sightseeing - and then the places they are taken to see are not always the most Everyone will go to the Shalimar Garden which is by far the most famous place in Kashmir. But few will realise that Shalimar owes its reputation less to gardening than to a vastly popular Victorian poem called "Lalla Rookh," in which the garden was the vegue for a pair of lovers — and the poem was written by a poet who had never been to the East in his life. Because of the poem there was then a music-hall song — "Pale hands I loved beside the Shalimar," and then there was a French perfume, and the result is that thousands of people flock there for reasons quite unconnected with the garden itself.

Shalimar is worth seeing, particularly its black marble pavilion built by Shah Jahan, and so is the other great Mogul garden next door, Nishat, with its waterfalls and secret shady "women's terrace" under the mountain at the back, but more intriguing than either is Peri Mahal, a garden perched on the shoulder of a hill between the town of Sringgar and Nishat. Peri Mahal was built by Dara Shukoh, the son of Shith Jaman, for his spiritual tutor, and in its day it mind-have been one of the lovellest places on sardi. Only 10 years ago it was overgrown and almost un-visitable, but now it has been amount un-visitable, but now it has been cleared and it is possible to explore all the steep terraces — though accessibility has also brought a mushroom growth of hideous plastic lights, and an ugly pool of all the wrong proportions and design has been "reconstructed" on one of the levels. Noticineless Peri Mahal is built in a fabilious site and the proportions are constructed to be a second t the valley. It has not mite yet acquired a municipal park atmosphere — when I was

Dara Shukoh also built a mosque for his tutor at the foot of the Mari Porbat hill in Srinagar. This is called the Akhund Muliah Shah mosque, and though it is small and simple, it is movingly beautiful. Like Peri Mahal it has a marvelous site, and the building itself, in gray limestone, was exquisitely finished. But the little mosque has been al-lowed to tumble down and be vandalized to the extent that if something is not done quickly it will be too late. The irony is that a huge and expensive modern mosque has re-cently been built on the hill just above (at the surine of a holy man called Makidoom Sahab) while the perfect little Mogni gem has bees allowed to go to min.

A hundred years ago, people seem to have cared more about it, for then three European travelers got into trouble when they tried to steal a door from the Akhund Mullah Shah mosque, Baron Hilgel, Dr. Henderson and Godfrey Vigne met in Kashmir by coinci-dence in November 1835. In those days it was a fest of endurance to get to the valley at all, and the three men decided to place a stone with their names on it, and the names of all the past European travelers to the valley. They designed their inscription, and then decided that the ideal stone would be one of the imperione doors of the Akhund Minlish Shah mosque, Vigne went to get one, but the stone door was far too heavy to shift. Life Dext day he sent his servant armed with the appropriate tackle to fetch the door, but he too returned without it, saying that a large crowd had assembled to prevent the door being taken. The travelers didn't believe him and were about to try again when Hügel's servants came to him and told him that the whole city was up in arms at the idea of the door of the mosque being removed, and that "nothing but our robbery was talked of in the bazaar." The three hastily looked elsewhere for their stone, and found a suitable one in the Shalimar garden -one can't help wondering what lovely thing there they de-faced. Their stone was duly installed on the island called Char Chenar, but it has long since disappeared:

In Srinagar is another beautiful Moghul mosque similar in style to Akhund Mullah Shah. This is the Patthar Masjid, which was designed by Nur Jahan, the remarkable wife of the Mogul Emperor Jahangir. In 1902 the Archaeological Survey of India described this mosque, together with the mosque of Akhund Mullah Shah and the black marble pavilion in the Shalimar Garden, as three buildings "unsurpassed in purity of detail and design" by anything in Agra or Delhi. Nur Jahan's mosque is called the Slipper Mosque — apparently because when some-one asked her how much it had cost to build she pointed to her jeweled slippers and said as much as those Supposedly for this reason, the mosque as more often used as a grain store than as a place of worship, but it has recently been caned up and is used again as a mosque. Its surroundings are pretty dreary, but what is left of the old wooden door leading to the mosque's one-time landing stage on the river has some pretty floral carving. From Patthar Masjid, the visitor could walk up to the new Fatch Kadal Bridge (also called the Biscoe Bridge) and from there look down the Jhelum River toward the rickety but picturesque old Fatch Kadal, the ancient wood-and-bridg should provide the problem of brick shawl merchants' houses leaning perilously over the river, and the curious, pagodalike roof of the Shah Hamadan mosque on the opposite bank.

Visitors of a soulful turn of mind might enjoy exploring the Kashmir of the British rather then the Mogula. The small British community of engineers, architects, teachers, administrative officers and so on who served the maharspas of Kashmir between 1847 and independence, lived in the area behind the Bund (not far from the Tourist Office). There you will find all sorts of houses that would look more at home is Sorrey, and All Saints' Church, where once the British Resident used to read the Lesson on Sundays. (It was burned in riots some years ago, but its tower remains.)

From All Saints' it is a pleasant walk to the Christian cemetery on the Bund. Start at Zero Bridge and continue downstream along the Bund passing the Residency (now the Handicrafts Emporium) where the garden parties were famous for their strawberries and cream, the old Srinagar Club, the hideous new Post Office and the rather charming but decrepit old one. Walk on, past Suffering Moses (a famous dealer in papiermaché), past the black-and-white "stockbro-ker Tudor" building that houses Grindlay's Bank, and on until you are directly opposite the Srinager Museum on the opposite bank of the river. Here there is a turn-off from the Bund to the entrance (unmarked) to the

In the farthest left-hand comer of this pretty walled enclosure, once an orchard, through a pair of lych-gates exactly like those in an English churchyard, you will find the oldest graves — including that of Robert Thorp, the son of a Kashmiri woman and an Englishman. Thorp campaigned unceasingly to improve the lot of the poor Moslems of Kashmir until in 1868, so the story goes, the Hindu maharaja had him poisoned. His tombstone bears the inscription "He gave his life for Kashmir." Other graves tell of the dramatic deaths of long-ago visitors to Kashmir who met their ends falling over precipices, being savaged by leopards, or caught in avalanches. And then there are the poignant graves of all the British children who died of sickness - "In loving memory of our dear little pets, Lena Myrtle aged 2 years 4 months, and Eustaco Livingstone aged 9 months." But this is a living cemetery (if one can say such a thing) and there are also the recent graves of Europeans who have died "on our holiday" as one inscrip-

In the same enclosure is a tiny Hansel and Gretel cottage with the remains of lucky iron horseshoes nailed above the foor. This was Holton Cottage, the home of a famous missionary, Cecil Tyndale Biscoe, who spent 57 years in Kashmir running a school in which his aim was "to turn bi-peds into MEN." Biscoe left the valley at independence and died long ago, and his charming little cottage is now in a sad state, but he would be happy to know that his school still flourishes indeed most of Kashmir's present ruling class attended it.

After the cemetery, visitors can walk back to the Bund and hire a shikara boat to take them across the river to the museum where there are some nice old pieces of papiermaché, and shawls.

WALK of a completely different character takes you across the causeway that spans the Dal Lake from Ramawari, a suburb of Srinagar, to opposite Nishat Garden. A taxi should be organized to go to the beginning of the causeway (or suttoo, as it is called locally) on the Rainawari side, and meet you again at the Nishat end. The walk is about four miles long and it passes through an enchanted world of green willows, floating gardens and dappled waters — a glimpse of a Cashmiri way of life that you would not

On all the tourist itineraries there is a day trip to Gulmarg, a resort in the hills, from vhere you can, on a clear day, see Nanga Purbat, one of the highest peaks in the Himalayas. But Gulmarg is touristy and crowded and for my money I'd do my day trip to Sonamarg if I wanted mountains and lovely scenery, Wular Lake if I felt like a wild landscape, and Martand if I wanted to see something man-made. The great sun temple Martand was built in the eighth century Lalitaditya, the Hindu king of Kashmir. i lies in ruins now, but even these are appressive, and as Sir Francis Younghusband, who was British Resident in Kashmir at the beginning of this century, wrote: "No temple was ever built in a finer site," Martand is a few miles off the road to Pahalgam in the Liddar Valley — a place that features on many tourist programs. A comfortable half-day trip would be a drive to Manasbai lake, a pretty, peaceful place about 45 minutes by car north of Srinagar. Where the road meets the lake there is a arden on the hillside at the bottom of which is a curious small carved stone Hindu temple partially submerged in the lake water. You can hire a shikara boat to take you across the lake to the Mogul garden built by Nur Jahan on the bank facing you, though only the ruins of terraces and some giant chenar trees mark the site today.

Indeed, throughout the Kashmir valley these huge old trees planted by the Mogula act as flags pinpointing the places they con-sidered beautiful. The sad part is that there does not seem to be any re-planting of the chenars. "They take 300 years to grow to that size," said a Kashmiri, "so what is the point." "The point," we lectured him severely, "is that that is all the more reason for getting them in NOW."

FOOD LOVER'S GUIDE TO FRANCE

Summer Supping and Sipping

ARIS — As the city at last takes on a summer air, it is time for minor distractions - finding a new wine bar and perhaps a new wine, sipping exotic tea in a cozy salon de the in the Marais, pausing for a shockingly rich load chocolate at a new Right Bank boutique.

A lively new kunch spot near the Palsis Royal is the three-month-old Juveniles, the second offspring of Mark Williamson, owner of Willi's Wine Bar. The alley-like wine bar and shop is short on decor, but the casual, relaxed crowd and friendly waiters supply the necessary ambience. The wine selection is superb — meticulously selected wines from little vineyards all over France — and the food is thoroughly respectable.

I loved the snack of tiny new potatoes topped with raclette cheese and bits of barrens the harmon form files conducts.

con, the he-man faux-filet sandwich - thick slices of buttered toast around layers of beef, tomatoes and watercress bathed in a creamy mustard dressing — and the satisfying chick-en salad "salad," a blend of greens and huge chunks of chicken showered with an escabeche of olives, carrots, and tomatoes.

Try the meaty 1983 Bandoi Château Vannière, or the 1986 white Bergerac, Châtean La Jaubertie, with a finesse combining the tartness and fruit of a Loire white and the well-defined structure of a Bordeaux. Wines are well priced, with a selection that can be carried out for anywhere from 18 to 150 francs a bottle. Those in search of more exotic surroundings should stroll to the Marais, where one of France's oldest and most respected tea importers has opened a combination tea boutique and tasting salon. As you wander down the rather scruffy Rue de Bourg-Tibourg you have no idea what is in store. But as soon as you approach Mariage Frères, your senses are transported to an appealing pleasurable world. The aroms of a mingling of exotic teas from China, Japan, Brazil and Bangladesh invades the senses, sounds of Wagner's "Tristan and Isolde" full the air, as your eyes focus on a plant- and wicker-filled, neocolonial space bathed in delicate light and decorated in pale other and white.

There are some 300 varieties of teas from 20 countries, as well as an astonishingly complete selection of tea paraphemalia, including about 200 teapots, a charming individual tea service, even a series of wicker picnic sets that will make you want to pack up and take off at the next opportunity.

Smokers and non-smokers are discreetly segregated (smokers are directed to a second room upstairs) for, as the menu suggests, la senteur de nos thés s'accomode fort mal de l'odeur du tabac.

All the available teas are described in painstaking detail in the dictionary-like menn, and even tea experts are likely to feel overwhelmed. But one can always cop out and order one of the more familiar teas, among them a delicately perfumed Darjee-ling a penetrating, flinty Keemun, or a rich and pungent Assam.

With such pleasant surroundings, it's a shame the food is not better. But the salad combinations are simply silly, and tea-infused specialties, such as ice creams, barely have the taste of tea. Better to come for breakfast or tea, for the flaky current-filled scones, served with a variety of tea jellies, or the soothing tarte aux fraises des bois, excellent pate sable smothered with a blend of pastry cream and wild strawberries, all topped with a crackling caramel crust. Fans of Robert Linxe's La Maison du Chocolat on Rue du Faubourg Saint-Honoré will be delighted to hear of his two-week-old sister shop on Rue François Ier. Here, in a cool, pristine, chocolate-hued boutique, chocolate lovers can sit at the marble-topped bar or around low, round tables, and indulge in one of the world's greatest passions.

One scorching day this week I was instantinvigorated by a Guayaquil frappé, a tall glass of iced chocolate, a whipped blend of bitter chocolate ice cream and rich, melted chocolate. The menn offers no less than five variously flavored hot chocolates, chocolate mousse, sorbets and ice creams. The chocolates, pastries and cakes can be purchased to sample in the shop or to take home. The diminutive menu offers a sampling of appropriate gastronomic sayings, including a pertinent warning from St. Ignatius of Loyola, founder of the Jesuit order: "Gourmandise is a capital sin. So therefore, my brothers, let us guard against being gourmands. Let's be gournets."

Bell Phone Competitors In U.S. Struggle for a Niche

By PHILLIP H. WICCINS New York Times Service

EW YORK - While most of the Bell telephone spinoffs have fared well since the cours-imposed breakup of American Telephone & Telegraph Co. at the start of 1984, the performances of the country's leading independent telephone companies have varied widely.

Some independents have been hurt by overdiversification into such areas as cable television, electric utilities, satellite services and computers and information services. Others, such as United Telecommunications Inc. and GTE Corp., have been adversely affected by poorly-performing long-distance operations.

All the independents face greater pressure in a lower-rate-base environment as well as the problem of being in a virtually Telephone mature business.

According to James Rit-chey, an analyst at Gruntal & Co., the independent teleshone companies are "buckng up against" the maximum returns on equity permitted by state regulators. "Allowed returus are down to a current 12.

Cellular telephone systems have come down drastically in price in recent years and are now owned by a fast-growing group of more than 700,000 people across the United States.

James M. McCabe, telecommunications analyst at Nomura Securities, is optimistic. "Cellular is off to an excellent start in both the United States and international markets," he said. Telephone companies are doing at least as well, and in most cases, better, than projected in the cellular business."

Analysts expect the other leading telephone companies to continue to show mixed earnings results. The summary looks something like this:

 GTE: Earnings of the No. 1 independent phone company are expected to slip to about $3.25 a share in 1987 from $3.53 a share in 1986, but the 1988 per-chare results could be as high as $3.55 a share. Reed PLC To Buy Octopus

Agreed Offer Is £540 Million

LONDON - Reed International PLC, the publishing and paper conglomerate, offered £540 million ($870 million) on Thursday for Britain's biggest independent house, Octopus Publishing Group PLC, the companies said.

It was the latest in a series of offers and acquisitions that have twned Britain's publishing indus-try into a multimillion-pound corporete bettlefield.

Reed's chief executive, Peter J. Davis, said the offer resulted from an approach by Octopus's chair-man, Paul Hamlyn, who owns a najor stake in the company. Reed has also bought a 35 per cent stake in Octopus owned by BTR PLC, Mr. Davis said. "We had many gaps in publishing particularly in general trade books," he said Octopus shares were suspen at 430 pence each Wednesday, after they jumped 54 pence during the day. On Thursday, Octopus rose a further 57 pence to 487 in late trading on the London Stock Exchange.

Reed shares sank Thursday, closing at 546 pence after a close Wednesday night at 563 pence.

Reed has been the subject of stock market speculation about a bid in recent weeks, following sharp rises in its share price. Analysts said, however, that the acquisition of Octopus was likely to lend off any predators.

Octopus bought the Heinem roup for £100 million in 1985. Its ivisions also include Secker and Warburg and Pan paperbacks. In 1986 Octopus's pretex profit grew to £26.04 million from £20.37 mil-

They cited the fact that the Labor Department based much of its report on a survey of households conducted June 7-13, earlier than usual and before millions of teenagers had finished high school.

Because June surveys normally show millions of youths entering the labor market, when this year's goods-producing payrolls insurvey was adjusted for seasonal factors it indicated the nation's la bor force had shronk by 476,000 WASHINGTON - The U.S. and that the total of out-of-work people dropped by 286,000. Two-thirds of those people miss ing from the unemployment rolls were teenagers, the Labor Department said. Economists said those icens probably would have been counted - and thus would have pushed the unemployment rate igher - had the Labor Department surveyed the job scene later in the month.

Because of those problems, economists tended to concentrate on a eparate survey in the report that said the number of nonfarm jobs grew by a modest 116,000 last month. This was above the rise of 74,000 in May, revised down from the previously reported 123,000.

Janet Norwood, commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, said that the nation's nonfarm pay-roll had been growing by 250,000 people a month from January through April, then slowed to 100,000 in May and June.

That tells us the economy slowed in the second quarter of the year but didn't go into the tank," said Donald Ratajczak, head of the Economic Forecasting Project at

Boesky Reportedly Shielded

BOSTON — Ivan F. Boesky, the speculator at the center of Wall Street's insider-trading scandul, has shielded more than $160 million

Some of Mr. Boesky's money now beyond the reach of the prosecu

According to the newspaper, the government acknowledged that some of the $65 million held by his family may have resulted from insider ups from Martin Siegel, the investment banker who pleaded guilty to providing Mr. Boesky with information on takeovers.

Mr. Boesky's ability to shield some of his wealth appears to stem from the agreement he made last September with the SEC and the U.S. attorney, providing that the government would not seek cash penalties from his wife, his children or companies he controlled.

The newspaper reported that, although it previously had not been made public, Mr. Boesky negotiated the agreement while shifting assets to his wife and children.

In one instance, just two weeks before Mr. Boesky made his agreement with the SEC, his wife, Secret, purchased his interest in an Oklahoma City television station and his 4 percent interest in the Beverly Hills Hotel, which sold last year for about $135 million. Mrs.

Australia Central Bank Is Accused of Playing Pre-Election Politics

SYDNEY — Australia's central bank be-came embroiled in a political controversy Thursday after a leading U.S. bank questioned its role in pushing down interest rates ahead of July 11 elections.

Prime Minister Bob Hawke and Treasurer

Printe Minister Bob Hawke and Treasurer Paul Keating denied any government manipulation of the Reserve Bank of Australia, which is supposed to be politically independent.

The leader of the opposition Liberal Party,

Japan Moves to Widen Bidding on Telecoms

Agence France-Presse TOKYO — The Japanese government has notified the United States that it will accept applications by two groups for the establishment of international telecommunication companies to create greater competition, govern-ment sources said Thursday. At first, the government had urged the two rival groups to merge.

The international telecommunications sector has been run by Japan's international commu-nication company, Kokusai Denshin Denwa. The rival groups are International Digital Communications Planning Inc. and Interna-tional Telecommunications Japan Inc., an all-Japanese consortium. International Digital is a consortium of 35 companies, with C. Itoh & Co. Cable & Wireless PLC and Pacific Telesis Inc., a U.S. company, the major shareholders.

Pohl Pledges To Slow Rise

steps, but said that the Bundesbank would stick to its 3 to 6 percent growth target for central bank money stock. This key measure has overshot the target range all year. In May, for example, it grew at 7.9 percent.

they have been arranged by intermediary trading companies, which assume most of the risk.

But in the new field of indirect offsets, multinational companies arrange the deals themselves. This fact alone has forced companies to create subsidiaries and divisions to deal with the new business, significantly shifting corporate resources. And the transactions go far beyond simple barters and export promotion, into such activities as arranging financing for hotels, building hospitals and schools and even high-level political lobbying. In the past five years, indirect offsets have grown to account for about half the payments for the worldwide sales of military equip-ment, according to Aaron Karp, director of arms trade studies at the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute (SIPRI). He adds that the offsets often become the deciding factor in multibillion-dollar bidding competitions.

But the familiar essay, once a staple of civilized letters, has fallen on very bad times

The familiar essay writer nowadaya has to be the editor of a periodical in which he can be as own publisher while hoping that a publishing house will eventually rescue him from the ani-biguous role of samizdatchik. Thus Joseph Epstein, who writes literary criticism with regularity and distinction in various magazines, nevertheless ends up printing his familiar es-says in The American Scholar, which he edits, and it is there that all but one of the 16 pieces in his new collection, "Once More Around the Block," first appeared

Epstein's familiar essays truly are familiar indeed, personal — to the degree that they can be considered fragments of an autobiography

as delivered by a very high-class stand-up com

ic. It is not an easy job, for though one-knows-pretty much who the audience is for fiction and-standard nonfiction, one does not know for whom one is monologuizing in the familiar essay, other than like any artist, for onesself.

essay, other than, like any artist, for oneself.

These are good topics and, at roughly 16 or 17 pages each. Epstein can promulgate his ideas comfortably but usually without outstaying his welcome; but, third and best, he has a style that can be lapidary and epigrammastic or discursive and challenging, as the occasion demands. The opinions and opinionatedness, though very much those of an ardent necessity servative, are worn with a certain lightness that takes the sting off them, although not off the butts of his jokes. (John Simon, WP)

Poland's Piasecki Takes Lead in Tour de France, Adding to Race's Ironies was Lech Piasecki, who grew up in Poland. There, the major bicycle event is the Peace Race, which is staged in East Germany, Czechodovatca, Poland and, sometimes, the Soviet Union.

Piasecki rode in, and won, the Peace Race. That victory helped win him a place on the Del Tango team in Italy in exchange for a big payment to Polish sports authorities

But, in another of the political inquies that have marked the Tour e France's start in West Berlin, the 25-year-old Piasecki found himself being acclaimed by hundreds of ruhe, West Germany, for another two stages in that country before communist East Berlin, where bicycle racing is a major sport, he went ung. Presecki took the lead in the day's first stage, a 105.5-kilometer (70. mile) jamit through the streets and parks of West Berlin. He finished sign overall, in the same time as the vinner, Nico Verhoeven of the Super Confex team: 2 hours, 11 minies and 33 seconds. That, phis his second place in Wednesday's prologue, that put Piasecki atop the 207-man field in least clapsed time.

The Pole then retained the jersey in the afternoon stage, a 40.5 kilometer team time trial, or race against the clock, in which the time of a team's fifth finisher applies to all of its first five riders.

In the time trial, Piasecki's Del Tango team showed its strength by finishing second among the 23 frams in the Tour. The Carrera team from Italy won the race in a time of 44 minutes 50.04 seconds, or at a speed of 54.6 kilometers an hour. Del Tango was clocked at 44:58.95. followed by Panasonic from the Netherlands, Toshiba from France

2d-Fastest Mile Run By Morocco's Aouita

The Associated Press HELSINKI - Said Acuita of Morocco ran the second fastest mile in history Thursday, 3 minutes and 46.76 seconds, at a Grand Prix track meet.

He just missed the world record of 3:46.32, set by Steve Cram of Great Britain two years ago in Oslo, but set national and African seconds as he took the lead for good with one lap left.

Markus Hacksteiner of Switzerland was the runner-up, in 3:55.67, while Sydney Marce, the U.S. record holder in the 1,500, 2,000 and 5,000 meters, finished third in 3:55.99.

Chris Evert, returning a shot by Martina Navrafilova, could not stop the defending champion from winning, 6-2, 5-7, 6-4.

Navratilova, Graf to Meet in Final

WIMBLEDON, England -Martina Navratilova defeated Chris Evert in a tough, three-set match Thursday, then Steffi Graf overpowered Pam Shriver to join the defending champion in the women's final at the Wimbledon tennis tournament

Navratilova, the No. 1 seed, mixed steady play from the baseline with her usual serve-and-volley power game, then threw in a dash of acrobatics as she beat Evert, 6-2, and, Navratilova said, it "might have been the best match we've ever played." Graf, the 18-year-old second seed from West Germany, who beat Nav-ratilova for the French Open title a month ago, scored her biggest grass-court victory so far, a 6-0, 6-2 rout of the fifth-seeded Shriver.

That ran her winning streak to 45 matches. In Saturday's final she has a chance to win her eighth tournament in a row, and to keep Navratilova from making history on the surface she likes best.

Navratilova has won every previous Wimbledon final she has reached. If she does again, the Czech-born, U.S.-naturalized lefthander will have a record sixth consecutive championship and a record-equaling eighth overall, as well as her first tournament victory of a relatively disappointing year. still no reason to believe that he is going to had one break point in the match. He could win a third singles title at the All England Club. And yet, 124 men are gone from this year's tennis tournament, 4 are left and the one that everyone is rooting for is the oldest of them all, Jimmy Connors. A Wimbledon victory for Conners, remantic as it would be, is not likely. The other three men who have reached Friday's semifinals - Ivan Lendl, Stefan Edberg and Pat Cash -are younger, stronger and

But even if he doesn't win, this will be remembered as Jimmy Connors' Wimble-don. Wednesday evening, 24 hours after a conceback they will talk about long after Connors stops playing — if he ever does — he faced a more damning opponent, Slobodan Zivojinovic of Yugoslavia.

And, on a day when the very act of getting his 34-year-old body out of bed should have earned him an ovation, Connors blew Zivojinovic off Court 1, beating him by a score of 7-6 (7-5), 7-5, 6-3. Zivo-

Last night I had to turn off my phone because of all the calls. But I slept well, felt fine when I went out to practice and felt good on the court."

· Connors's next opponent will be Cash, the Australian who may be playing the best tennis of the group. Wednesday, Cash made third-seeded Mats Wilander of Sweden look helpless, ousting him from Wimbledon for the third time in four years, 6-3, 7-5, 6-4.

"The way he played today there was nothing I could do," Wilander said. "For me to beat him on grass, when his game is like that, I would have to be a different player."

"But he wouldn't do that. Then, today, he just played a hell of a match." Connors was greeted, as he came on court, like a gladiator returning from a conquest, which was proper. In the locker room, other players had come up time and again to congratulate him on Tuesday's escape. Their reaction was respect and amaze ment," Connors said. "That was nice. Any player wants the respect of his peers." He has always had that. Now, though, he has gained a new level, not just with the players but with the fans. Even the English bledons, 11 semifinals and 78 singles victories, he has won them to his side. They almost willed him to victory against Pernfors and, Wednesday, they were his partners from the start.

"That is a normal thing I think," said Zivojinovic. "If I was in the stands, I would be for Jimmy, too. To me, he is the greatest player. He doesn't play for the money, he plays because he loves the tennis."

He loves it all. The tennis, the adulation, the mano-a-mano matches. Zivojinovic was a heaven-sent opponent, Another Pernfors, a baseliner, a chaser, might have been too much to handle. This was Connors' third match in 48 hours and the first two were not easy.

Wagner, Rock 'n' 'Ring'

EW YORK — Americans still like to argue about rock music. My position is simple. I'd rather argue about it than listen to it.

The quarrel about rock has received fresh blood from Professor Allan Bloom's book, "The Closing of the American Mind," which describes it as a music aimed at promoting and exploiting youth's natural weakness for brutishness.

I have had rock music aimed at me ever since my kid sister first put "Drinking Wine Spodee Odee" on the electric Victrola 40 years ago. but I have rarely been able to understand what was being sung. I well remember that historic day she showed me the future roaring before me, still remember asking her: What in the world are they

"Drinking wine spodee odee," she replied. I listened. Sure enough, that's what they were saying, and that's all they were saying, over and over: "Drinking wine spodee odee."

It was just silly kid-sister stuff. Still, it had kind of a catchy — you

Recalling that day, I can still hear the racket of the thing in my memory, but I can't hum the music or whistle it. Even the more compelling rock that came along in the 1950s is like that. Remember going to see "The Blackboard Jungle" and the lights going dim and then, suddenly — wow! — Bill Haley's "Rock Around the Clock" shaking the theater and everybody in it? That one was unusual. It had words you could hear through the music, and the music was truly something. You remember that sound and how it affected you, but I'll bet you can't whistle it.

This can be said of, oh, maybe 98 percent of all rock: you'd have to be First Whistler of the New York Philharmonic to leave the theater humming the music.

OK, first to exceptions. I hate to mention the Beatles because so many of the highbrow rock critics throw up their hands when you say the Beatles and hold you up to ridicule by saying, "But you, of course, would naturally say 'the Beatles,' and you doubtless think "Sergeant Pepper" was superior to "Rubber Soul." So my apologies for mentioning the Beatles. However, not only could you understand the lyrics of most Beatles songs, you could also whistle or hum quite a few. I am humming seven or eight right now

Don't get me going on the Rolling Stones. Not even the First Whistler of the New York Philharmonic could whistle "(Can't Get No) Satisfaction." There's nothing there to whistle. As for the Stones lyrics, you might as well listen to subway crashes, or the music of

"Not as bad as it sounds," was Mark Twain's judgment on Wag-ner, and the judgment may be just as apt for rock music, for Wagner and rock have a lot in common. You can't hum Wagner either, and without a libretto you can't make much sense of what's being said. Like the rockers, Wagner did not captivate his passionate devotees with words or melody, but with the corybantic throb of the music.

When young people get angry about criticism of rock they often reply that rock is their music and that old folks whose music it replaced are either sour about being passe or lack the tolerance to listen to the new. What's interesting about this argument is the insistence that a rock generation possesses the music, that it is theirs.

Yet it is not theirs, not in the way the music of Jerome Kern, Cole Porter, Richard Rodgers, Irving Berlin, et al, was the music of an earlier generation. Because it was music that could be hummed, whistled, even sung by unskilled voices, an earlier generation could take that music with them wherever they Rock belongs to machinery. Without records, tapes, cassette players, stereo speakers, radios, television sets, you can't make rock music. You can't whistle it, or hum it, or sing it. Without machinery, it cannot be yours.

The same is true for Wagner. You can walk the beach and hom Mozart's "Don Giovanni" or whistle Verdi's "La Traviata," but without machinery Wagner's "Ring" operas cannot be yours.

In my game book, this is another strike against both rock and Wag-ner. I hate machinery at the beach.

The Perpetually Tough Malthusian

By John Noble Wilford vironmental movement in the New York Times Service

New YORK — Garrett Hardin, the ecologist, biologist and author, walked into the room with the help of metal crutches (he had polio as a child), and by all appearances he could surely be counted on as a conventional believer in the virtue of human charity. He has smiling eyes and a friendly face, and someone said he could be taken for a beloved small-town minister. In a biographical note, he has described himself as a Republican, a Unitarian and a father of four. So the In his lectures this month, he words of his harsh message could hardly be more jolting.

"There's nothing more dangerous than a shallow-thinking compassionate person," Hardin said in a recent interview. "God, he can cause a lot of trouble."

As a latter-day Malthusian, who believes that runaway population growth will lead to misery and ruin, Hardin was arguing that the gifts of food to faminewracked Ethiopia probably did more harm than good. Like many poor countries, he said, Ethiopia has violated a cardinal principle of ecology: its population exceed its carrying capacity, its devel-oped resources to produce food and wealth. "Since Ethiopia has far too many people for its resources," he said, "if you give food and save lives and thus increase the number of people, you increase suffering and ultimately increase the loss of life." To those familiar with Hardin's thinking and writings over the years, the blunt words are characteristic. He is accustomed to attacking taboo subjects, whether laissez-faire economics, altruism or the Western belief in individualism and progress. In a series of lectures this month at the American Museum of Natural History in New York City, he showed that he has lost none of his zest for intellectual combat.

Hardin is now 72 and a professor emeritus of human ecology at the University of California at Santa Barbara, where he had taught since 1946. He was a leader in the fight for legalized abortions. His theories, especially his interpretation of the limits to growth in a finite world, served as scientific underpinning to the en-defended Malthusian theory, which has been discredited by most economists, as a "rational nost economists, as a rational view of population dynamics." At the end of the 18th century,

Thomas Robert Malthus, an English clergyman and economist, postulated that population naturally tends to grow "geometrical-ly." In a finite world this means the per-capita share of the world's ine per-capita share of the world's goods must steadily decrease. But a kind of equilibrium is maintained, he said, by war and pestilence or, finally, by famine that "with one mighty blow, levels the population with the food of the world." Since the time of Malthus world population has grown from 900 million to about 5 billion, without quite the dire cousequences he had predicted. Malthus had failed to recognize the importance of technology in rais-ing the set point on what Hardin calls the "demostat." This led many economists to believe that Maithus has been disproved, and it encouraged the vision that, with modern technology, bigger populations could be accommodated, perhaps even with an improved standard of living.

As Hardin noted, Malthus has been denounced by both liberals, "because of his pessimistic view of human nature," and conserva-tives, "because he disparaged perpetual growth."

Much the same could be said of Hardin, for reasons perhaps made clearest in a 1968 essay. "The Tragedy of the Commons" summed up the ecological basis for his conviction that population growth cannot be permitted to

This was, in part, a response to another of Hardin's essays, "Living on a Lifeboat," which aroused a chorus of cuticism. According to Hardio's "lifeboat ethic," if a country produces more people and appeals for help to keep from anking others should ignore the appeal and concentrate on keeping their own boats affoat. This is the basis for Hardin's opposition to sending food to Ethiopia because, he said, if would only contribute to overpopulation.

The fatal flaw in this reasoning is that excess population is a result of poverty not the other way around, argued Arthur Si-mod, executive director of Bread for the World, a public-policy organization in Washington.

In countries without adequate forms of social security, Smoon said, the desperately poor have "as many children as they can to assure they will have surviving sons to support them in their old age." In places where the poor areimproving themselves, he added, "they begin voluntarily to have fewer children."

Beyond that, he said, the "lifeboat ethic" is "just not morally acceptable."

Many of Hardin's critics note that the world produces more than enough food to feed the world population today. The world population today. The problem they argue, is the meven distribution of the food supply, which is a positical and economic Imprime par Offprint, 73 rue de l'Enangile, 75018 Paris.

Perched on form cushions so he could see out the window of his Cessna 210; the 11-year-old pilot John Kevin (Hank) Hill ended a weeklong trip across the United States with a flawless landing Wednesday at National Airport in Washington John Kevin's flight instructor, Mark Fields, accompanied him on the plane trip, which began in Los Angeles because the Federal Aviation: Administration forbids anyone under 16 from flying solo. Fields said he never took control of the plane. Since John Kevin took a $20 plane ride over Dallas two years ago, he's been "hooked" on planes. He already has logged 260 airborne hours.
